Dear Sir,

I see from various publications today that there is now a committee looking into the RSPCA (WA) with particular reference to funding, objectives and use of its powers.

The the aim of the RSPCA is to protect animals; the increasing shrill language and imaging that is used in advertising against all forms of legitimate past times such as farming, general animal sale/husbandry, hunting in particular is I believe outwith is social position, it's governmental funding position and its Incorporated remit.

The RSPCA in general seems to have shifted position seemingly to appeal to a wider section of the populous. I believe the position it now occupies is less likely to appeal to the broader public, and will increase the organizations reliance on a decreased revenue stream namely the public purse or larger individual benefactors.

I believe we have do see increasing evidence of a quasi-political nature, which moves the organization away from its core objectives.

Yours Sincerely

Mr R .Lewsey
