

School zoning does not line up with the existing transport policy which then affects the allocation of a permanent seat on the appropriate school bus. The transport policy uses distance as a determining factor for the nearest appropriate school whereas school zoning is based on the intake area. Thus a permanent seat on the appropriate bus route is not available to the student to get to their designated school, which then places more stress on parents/carers to ensure their child can attend their intake area school.