Subject: End of Life Choices

We will all die, that's a given. I believe that every adult person should have the right to make end of life choices if they are suffering from severe or incurable illnesses and treatment options to provide quality of life are not available. If a person has an existing health condition where outcomes are known and these outcomes would cause considerable pain and suffering, the person should be able to make their decisions clear to family and medical practitioners and anyone involved with their care. Of course, the decision making process would be within a defined framework of diagnosis, progress of the condition and counselling. Everyone should have the right to die with dignity.
