

12th October 2017

To Whom it may concern,

I think if someone is terminally ill, they should have the right to end it.

Lingering is hideous.

It is hideous for the patient.

It is hideous for the family and friends that love that person.

It is a burden on the health system.

It is a paradox for doctors (being in a modern world) where doctors have taken an oath to keep everyone alive, sometimes there is absolutely no point.

My grandmother, born in 1903, saw so much death.

She was an advocate for euthanasia.

I support euthanasia entirely, as long as it's all completely legally right and there is no foul play.

All the boxes have to be ticked. Everyone has to know where they stand.

It's a human right.

Amanda J. Finister